“When I went to Chicago more than 25 years ago as a community organizer, I worked with churches and I worked with unions to lift up families and neighborhoods that had been devastated when the steel plants were shut down. They'd given up hope. So I worked with the unions and the city government and we brought the community together to fight for its common future. If this sounds familiar, it's because that's what you guys do. You fight to make sure American workers get a fair shake in a changing economy. You stand up for our families when their government won't stand up for them.”

- Barack Obama's address to the IAM Grand Lodge Convention, September 12, 2008
